12. For years，Shay Taylor walked the halls of Yale New Haven Hospital with a mop and cleaning cart，making sure patient rooms were spotless.Soon，she'll be walking those same halls with a stethoscope （听诊器） — this time as a doctor.

Taylor's journey didn't follow a traditional path.After graduating in the top 10 percent of her class at high school，Taylor had the potential to go far，but she lacked proper guidance.Raised by a single mother，neither of them knew about college financial aid or school applications.At 18，needing to earn a living，she took a job as a cleaner at Yale New Haven Hospital.What started as a practical decision turned into nearly a decade of hard，honest work.

Then life took a turn that would change everything.After a devastating house fire，Taylor's mother suffered severe lung damage and began struggling to breathe.Despite repeated hospital visits，doctors couldn't find the cause and even dismissed her symptoms as psychological.Desperate for answers，Taylor reached out to the hospital's CEO，whose office she occasionally cleaned.She explained her mother's situation and asked for help.Within days，her mother got a new medical team and was diagnosed with vocal cord dysfunction，a rare overlooked condition. "If I could be a voice for my mom，" Taylor realized，"maybe I could do this for other patients." That moment inspired Taylor to become a doctor and advocate for patients who weren't being heard.

However，the road ahead wasn't easy.She studied college and graduate science courses alone，relying on simple Internet searches to guide her way，all while keeping her cleaner job to save money for medical school applications and exam fees.

Her determination finally paid off.Taylor was accepted into Howard University College of Medicine，and recently earned a residency at Yale New Haven Hospital — the very place where her journey started. "I would have never imagined this，" she said. "To come back to the same place — it means everything."

Now，she's preparing to return as an anesthesiology （麻醉学） resident，ready to care for patients and ensure their voices are heard.And she hopes her story inspires those uncertain about their future.

（1）Why was Taylor unable to continue her studies right after high school？ _____

13. It's often striking to me what causes confusion among French people.Most recently，an article in Le Monde reported younger adults are choosing to dine alone during their lunch breaks.Almost one-third of employees under 25 regularly lunch alone，according to a survey.

These statistics were shocking to me too，but in entirely the opposite way：so few？I forgot that when I was a waitress in Paris，I would serve groups of colleagues all the time.This culture may well be shifting，but it remains far more the norm（常态） there than in Britain.

There isn't much that makes me proud to be British，but a widespread understanding of other people's right to alone time is one such thing.If my colleague wants to eat alone in the canteen，I would not feel offended.Who am I to deny her that moment of peace？

France，however，tells a different story."So you don't want to see us？"one young woman was asked when she didn't join a team lunch.Ultimately，she was let go.She suspected it was because she rejected a social obligation."The boss behaved like a king，"she said."Everyone was afraid of him and laughed mechanically at his jokes.""Come and live here!"I want to tell her—everyone understands that lunch breaks are for going off by yourself.Forced socialising isn't how we do things.

Given the option，I' ll take solo dining.It's one of life's great pleasures，and that young adults are developing the confidence to do it should be celebrated.Gen Z is often criticized for being antisocial，but I expect there are other factors at play，such as a better understanding of how to look after their mental health.

It should be said that cutting yourself off from other people completely is never good.A rare group meal that has been anticipated is a far greater pleasure than a regular obligation that is feared.I didn't think the French had much to learn from us in terms of lunch，but now I'm not so sure.

（1）Why does the author feel shocked at the survey statistics？ _____
A.The low share of young French dining alone.
B.The loss of traditional dining culture.
C.The striking shift of the social norm in France.
D.The popularity of colleagues gathering.
（2）What might be the British attitudes towards lunch breaks？ _____
A.People are not easily offended.
B.Eating alone is widely accepted.
C.Employees prefer Canteen lunch.
D.Peaceful moment is often denied.
（3）By saying"Come and live here!"，the author implies _____..

A.her confidence in British work lunch culture
B.her affection for the French young woman
C.her desire to escape from French lunch culture
D.her preference for solo work over teamwork
（4）What is the author's main argument in the last paragraph？_____
A.Complete separation from others is advisable.
B.The French should follow British lifestyle.
C.Voluntary social interactions beat forced ones.
D.Regular group meals are also enjoyable.

14. WE MAY have been missing signals from intelligent aliens （外星人） because of solar wind.Researchers from the Search for Extraterrestrial Intelligence （SETI） Institute say this means we have been watching for the wrong type of signal，potentially failing to spot promising evidence of alien life，but the chances of a future discovery are now higher.

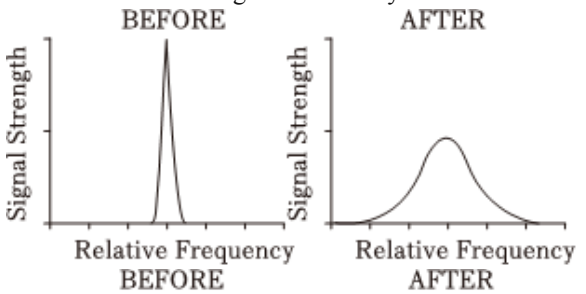

The not-for-profit organisation carries out research to help prove the existence of alien life，which includes listening for radio signals from outer space that cannot be explained by natural cosmological phenomena.

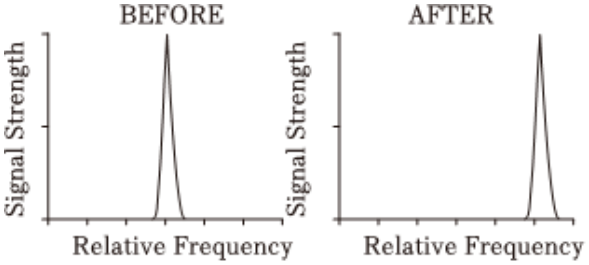

Such a signal was previously expected to be a sharp，distinct radio signal in a narrow frequency range.But the new research suggests that any such signals sent from distant planets may end up being made fainter and wider in the frequency band — essentially blurred slightly — as they pass through the stellar （恒星） winds of stars.

Vishal Gajjar and Grayce Brown at the SETI Institute calculated the scale of the effect on radio transmissions （传输） from spacecraft in our own solar system，and then extrapolated that to other stellar environments.They found that a 100-megahertz signal could be widened as much as 100 hertz — enough to "fall below traditional detection thresholds".A space weather event can similarly increase the amount of broadening experienced by a signal to a significant degree.

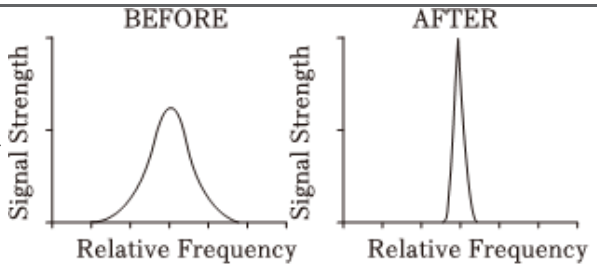

John Elliott at the University of St Andrews，UK，says he sees the news as the glass being half-full，not half-empty：it means previous searches may have missed evidence，but also means that future searches will be more likely to succeed. "It's over 50 years that we've been actively searching and that's a blink of the eye，isn't it，when you think about it，" says Elliott.

（1）Why have researchers possibly failed to receive signals from intelligent aliens？_____
A.The signals cannot reach the Earth.
B.Their equipment was not advanced enough.
C.The signals did not appear in the expected form.
D.Space weather events prevented the signal traveling.
（2）How is the alien signal affected by the stellar winds of stars？_____

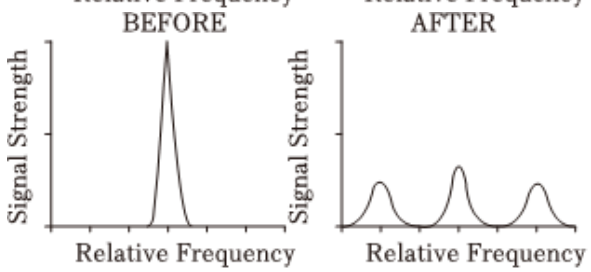

A.

B.

C.

D.

（Note：Plots show relative changes in signal width and strength，not absolute values.）

（3）What does paragraph 4 mainly talk about？_____

A.How the new findings were reached.

B.How spacecraft send radio signals.

C.What affects radio signal transmission.

D.What helped researchers make progress.

（4）Which statement does John Elliott probably agree with？_____

A.Much progress has been made so far.

B.Future discoveries will be fruitful.

C.Previous searches wasted a lot of time.

D.Fifty years is too long for alien hunting.

（4）推理判断题。根据最后一段John Elliott at the University of St Andrews，UK，says he sees the news as the glass being half-full，not half-empty：it means previous searches may have missed evidence，but also means that future searches will be more likely to succeed.
